cause it relates to one of the most interesting periods in the country's annals. The story of the presidential election is told in this volume, and much of the matter has never before been given to the public. The various phases of the multifarious financial question are also presented, and the statistical matter of the volume is especially valuable. It is not necessary to say more to those who have become accustomed to the author's previous publications; but to those who have not, we commend the new volume. It is almost indispensable to any person who has to handle or is desirous of understanding current public questions. The price of the book is two dollars. The general agent for the sale of the works of Mr. McPherson is Mr. G. F. Dawson, Washington, D. C.

THE MAN AND THE OFFICE.

In the old times, when politicians, as a rule, were as patriotic as the average voter, there was an unwritten law to the effect that the office should seek the man and not the man the office. But the improvements the independent have striven to inaugurate, do away with this relic of the past—the fossil that used to amuse the fathers. According to the independents, the man should seek the office. Mr. McPherson, standing upon a gloomy platform composed of modern dry goods boxes, placed grandly around upon a multi-tude composed largely of patriotic colored people, points his forefinger at his palpitating bosom, and remarks: "I am the man to represent you, my friends. I am the abnormally enlarged leech of this era. I have looked at this matter in front and from behind—I have examined it upon all sides—and, as the result of my investigations, I am free to confess to you that I am the only man who can adequately represent you in congress. The weight of the testimony is on my side. Colonel Pratt Lawrie says so; Colonel Smith Clayton, of Atlanta, has confessed it. Behold in me the great North American patriot, cut biased, and warranted not to tear loose in the middle."

Then, as a sort of echo, we hear Dr. Felton, "My Christian friends, I am the only man capable of representing you. I am the only truly good man to be found in this section. I am a real smart man; I am a big man. My intellectual deposits are very ripe. If you don't send me to congress, I shall think you are really foolish. Who could be so naughty as to vote against me when I want the office as badly as I do. I shall feel very much hurt if I am not elected."

And so it goes. The great objection to the independent movement is the fact that the man seeks the office and not the office the man. It introduces into our politics what our forefathers justly regarded as an abomination. Happily the democratic nominees in the seventh and ninth district gave a flat rebuke to this unhealthy ambition. Neither Judge Lester nor Colonel Billings was a candidate for congress—each of them had different aspirations, but they were taken up and nominated unanimously as soon as their names were called in the conventions. The office sought the men. How different the attitude of Felton and Speer, who are going about clamoring for office! There is a lesson in this.

THE NEW GERMAN PARLIAMENT.

The result of what has been called the greatest crisis in the civil politics of Europe since MacMahon's attempt in May, 1877, to destroy the French republic, continues to be a subject of deep interest. The exact result cannot be stated, as about fifty supplementary elections have become necessary. The following statement is but an estimate, and shows, moreover, at a glance the changes:

pendent of parliamentary grants, or absolute control of all the railroads in the empire. He is stronger than we are before the dissolution of the old parliament, but he lacks the working strength that he can wield under all circumstances. The man of iron must treat with one of two parties that he thoroughly dislikes. It is best, as it is. Socialism has received a check, and the chancellor is not in a position to carry reactionary measures to unreasonable lengths.

THE DIRECT-VOTE PLAN.

The Union county plan is better than the customary delegate system, because it provides for an expression of the will of a majority beyond a first choice, but a proposition is presented in the second and third (St. Louis) congressional districts that is better still. Both of St. Louis' democratic morning papers admit that the convention system affords no guarantee that the will of the majority will be recognized. All who fear the verdict of the voters are confident in their own powers of manipulation. They are opposed to primary meetings, or to any device that places the voters on a common, fair and equal footing. The man, on the other hand, who has a majority of the people at his back, fears the tricks of convention managers. He favors any direct-vote plan that presents itself.

The St. Louis plan, as presented by the Republican of that city, looks to an expression by the voter of his preferences for all the candidates in the field. Let it be required, says the Republican, that the ballots shall contain the names of the candidates in the order in which they are preferred by the voters as, for instance, in this way:

1. John Brown.

2. Wm. H. Harrison.

3. Henry Jones.

4. Richard Thompson.

5. James Harrison.

Now, if a majority of all the ballots shall name John Brown as No. 1, he will receive the nomination; but if the voters shall be so divided in their views that no one shall be "put in" by a majority of ballots, the nomination will go to such a candidate as shall have a majority vote, adding together for each candidate the number of ballots on which he is named as first and those naming him as second choice. That is, if there are 10,000 ballots cast, and 4,000 contain John Brown as No. 1, and 5,000 John Brown as No. 2, he would be the nominee. This scheme, adds the Republican, can readily be formulated so as to result in precisely the nomination which the majority of the people desire to make, and, at the same time, need present no complicated features to confuse the voter.

IN GENERAL.

The Southern Pacific railroad is shagging from a continuous line of cottonwood trees planted for telegraph poles. They all sprouted and live.

Kearney, the dryman, hauls in his figures of speech by the cart-load. He is going about clamoring for office! There is a lesson in this.

Lord Beaconsfield's private secretary, Mr. Montagu Corry, has had his little share of the honor, having been made a companion of the Bath.

The platform of the national party can be condensed into one plank: "Wanted, some money, without earning it."

Wonders will never cease. Sam Bard has temporarily gone out of the first of stars and stripes and is trying his hand as a temperance lecturer.

I will accept of no office whatever. If you have a quarter about you that is a different thing; but my political ambition is fully satisfied. H. Watson.

Something to wear means this year (at Saratoga) three new dresses a day with hats to match, and nineteen costly parcels.

How lovely women stoop—what folly—and feel too late their skirts give way, as yanks that pull back up, does Molly, and disappears from light of day.

When the communists get into power they will not allow a bank president to have a bowl of his own, all or half.

The revolution in values at Coney Island, N. Y., is so sudden and immense that leases which were being five years ago at $75 are now held at $80,000 for two years. The opening of new railroads did it.

The state ticket elected in Alabama last Monday was one in which agriculturists and mechanics are predominant. The governor's name is Cobb, the secretary of state, Sewee, and the superintendent of education, Box.

Washington Irving's old home at Sunnyside is growing old-looking and neglected. The ornamentation is shabby, and the picture makers have idealized it so that the reality presents a sad contrast.
